ESRC REVIEW OF PANEL AND COHORT STUDIES

Longview's first major project was completed in January with the handing over of the Longview team's report to the Economic and Social Research Council (ESRC). The work included interviews and correspondence with 70 experts and stake holders in the field of longitudinal research and involved examining 90 longitudinal studies in Britain and overseas – summaries are available of all of these. There was also a well-received consultative workshop held in St Anne's College Oxford in July last year at which 42 experts gave their views about the issues for the review. Once ESRC's Research Resources Board has considered the report and approved its wider circulation, it will be placed on the Longview Website.

Longview team that carried out the review:

Jean Martin, University of Oxford; John Bynner, Longview; Graham Kalton, Westat USA; Paul Boyle, St Andrews University; Harvey Goldstein, University of Bristol; Vernon Gayle, Stirling University; Sam Parsons, Institute of Education; Andrea Piesse, Westat USA.

LONGVIEW OXFORD CONFERENCE

The success of last year's July consultative conference, held in Oxford as part of the ESRC Review, inspired the idea of a repeat conference this year. St Catherine's College, Oxford has been booked for 21 July. We shall be discussing the results of the Panel and Cohort Studies Review and will be re-visiting a major topic of debate 30 years ago, to which longitudinal research has made a major contribution – "Cycles of Deprivation". The conference follows directly after ESRC's "Methods Festival" (17–20 July) – also being held at St Catherine's College – so we are looking forward to some overlap of attendance and mutual benefit between the two events.
